A Time of Transformation

May 2022

Dear Friends:

The two crisis years of the COVID-19 pandemic have brought dizzying changes, not only to how we all live and work but also to what we need to do to build the community of opportunity and equity that we envision.

Great thinkers and leaders from Albert Einstein to the Rev. Dr. Martin Luther King have long emphasized that crisis can and must be the impetus for positive change. Surely, this is true of our time. In 2020-22, amidst tragic losses and glaringly revealed inequities, our deep social and racial divisions have been so inescapable as to lead many to commit to do more and to do things differently.

This can be a time of transformation. Whether we all make it so here in Greater New Haven will determine much about the future of our community.

For The Foundation, these last two years have been about transforming what we do and how we do it, both to continue to address the urgent needs and deep inequities stemming from COVID-19 and to more fully “inspire, support, inform, listen to and collaborate with the people and organizations of Greater New Haven” in the words of our mission statement.

Transformation means many things at The Foundation. We are centering racial equity across all of our work. We are advancing economic as well as social solutions to the community’s challenges. We are engaging community members more broadly and deeply, listening in new ways to those close to the issues we seek to address and empowering them with the authority and resources to act on their ideas. We are building a culture that embraces innovation so we can respond better to the rapidly changing dynamics in our community.

The many ways in which these changes are reflected in our work are described throughout this annual report. At the same time, the pages that follow detail how The Foundation is building on our proud 94-year legacy of work with local donors and nonprofits, including receiving the largest gift in The Foundation’s history this past year for the benefit of four vitally important local organizations.

In addition to doing things differently, we are doing more. With the continuing extraordinary support of our donors and the unprecedented supplemental extraction from certain of our endowments under our Stepping Forward initiative, The Foundation will have an incremental $15 million in discretionary resources in 2021-23 to address the impacts of COVID-19 and to advance racial equity. Stepping Forward launched in early 2021. Its impact is reflected in all that is described in the pages of this annual report as well.

In 2022, The Foundation is reviewing our plans and strategies and considering adjustments we may need to make in order to most effectively support meaningful transformation in our community going forward.

As we do so, we see clear signs of genuine and important transformation. This annual report details three examples:

- While New Haven has long taken justifiable pride in the theatrical, musical, artistic and historic assets that make our area the cultural capital of Connecticut, the focus is shifting today. A movement to prioritize artists, creatives and different cultural traditions is beginning to transform how we think about our cultural life. Today, our community is increasingly about “cultural equity.”
- A new generation of leadership voices is emerging in our community. Bringing diverse perspectives and new ideas about what equity really looks like, these changemakers are challenging traditional ways of thinking and beginning to set a new agenda.
- With New Haven growing and private investment increasing, the public/private agenda in our community is increasingly focused on ensuring that the benefits of our growth are widely shared. “Inclusive growth” is beginning to replace “economic development” on the short list of our community’s major priorities.

These changes are at an early stage. Sustaining transformation will require that people and institutions across our community recognize the transformative changes that are happening and embrace them in ways that transcend longstanding divisions. That is how our community can build a future of greater opportunity and equity.

In 2022, as always, the work of community in Greater New Haven is rooted in connection, generosity and long-term commitment. The Foundation is deeply privileged to work with so many in our community who personify these values.

Yet today, the work of community is also different — it is about transformation too. This is now the work of The Community Foundation. We invite you to join us.

2021-22 Highlights

A RECORD YEAR

In 2021, The Foundation had its highest-ever level of discretionary community spending and also received its largest gift ever (see page 10). Stepping Forward, the supplemental, three-year $26 million commitment to address COVID-19 impacts and to advance racial equity, was launched in early 2021. The increase in discretionary spending from Stepping Forward contributed to total Foundation grants and distributions of more than $35 million to local nonprofits by year's end.

COVID-19 COMMUNITY FUND AWARDS OVER $1 MILLION

Over one million dollars was distributed through the Greater New Haven COVID-19 Community Fund and its committee in 2021, bringing the total distribution from the Fund — from its creation in March of 2020 to its retirement in December 2021 — to nearly $4.4 million to 164 organizations. Overall, the Fund, which was established in partnership with the United Way of Greater New Haven, helped an estimated 112,000 individuals by providing essential resources to front-line organizations aiding mostly persons of color and women with essentials such as food, shelter and access to healthcare.

ANOTHER OUTSTANDING YEAR FOR THE GREAT GIVE

The Great Give 2021, The Foundation's 36-hour online giving event, raised approximately $3.5 million for 431 local nonprofit organizations. Peer-to-peer fundraising campaigns rallied the donor base of participating nonprofits and contributed to their success. Twenty percent of participating organizations were those led by and serving people of color, an increase from previous years.

ANNUAL MEETING RECAPS AN EXTRAORDINARY YEAR OF LOSSES, CHALLENGES AND SURVIVAL

The Foundation's 2021 annual meeting, among the best-attended with guests virtually tuning in via a live video platform while others attending through Facebook and YouTube, was focused on the extraordinary challenges that resulted from the pandemic and on the awakening that continues around issues of racial equity. Guests were moved by a powerful video drawn from interviews of 15 local residents about their experiences and reflections. Foundation leadership reported on the events of the prior year and guests were treated to a musical performance by students at Cooperative Arts and Humanities High School.

STATEWIDE COLLABORATIVE IS ESTABLISHED TO BUILD SOCIAL AND ECONOMIC MOBILITY IN CITIES

The Foundation joined with the Hartford Foundation for Public Giving and Fairfield County's Community Foundation to form the Connecticut Urban Opportunity Collaborative (CUOC). Its director reports to all three foundations. CUOC is part of a cohort called Nexus for Equity and Opportunity Nationwide (NEON) which consists of nine community foundations from across the country working together with the goal of dismantling racist systems and structures so as to enhance social and economic mobility. CUOC is currently focused on three priority areas: advocacy and policy, inclusive economic growth and narrative change.

ANNUAL AWARD CELEBRATES ECONOMIC OPPORTUNITY

In October, the Greater New Haven Chamber of Commerce presented its second annual Equity and Inclusive Opportunity Award now re-named in memory of local business woman and inspiring mentor to young women of color, Sharon Clemons. The award was co-created and is sponsored by The Foundation. In 2021, the firm of Svigals + Partners of New Haven was honored for its commitment and track record in encouraging diversity and inclusion in the profession of architecture.

CITY RECOGNIZES NEW HAVEN HEALTHY START DURING INFANT MORTALITY AWARENESS MONTH

In September 2021, City of New Haven Mayor Justin Elicker issued a proclamation in recognition of Infant Mortality Awareness month and the work of New Haven Healthy Start (NHHS) in decreasing infant mortality. During the pandemic, NHHS and its doulas ensured a continuum of care for at-risk expectant mothers by shifting to telehealth visits and virtual breast-feeding education and support groups. NHHS also connected clients with transportation and housing assistance including partnering with Yale School of Medicine's Community Health Care Van. NHHS is a program of The Foundation and supported by the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services.

LISTENING SESSIONS GENERATE VALUABLE FEEDBACK FROM COMMUNITY MEMBERS

To learn what matters to community members, improve practices, and engage with new voices, The Foundation held a series of "Listening and Learning" sessions in 2021 facilitated by The Narrative Project. Valuable information emerged from the conversations, including recommendations for The Foundation to highlight the successes of our community more often and to expand our work bringing people together about important issues.

NEW PROGRAMS SUPPORT NONPROFIT RACIAL EQUITY WORK

The Foundation held a series of educational workshops and other trainings for local nonprofits around the topic of diversity, equity and inclusion. More than 90 organizations participated in the DEI-focused programs, which ranged from presentations on the history and current state of racism in the U.S. to one-on-one coaching sessions and trainings on unconscious bias, creating and nurturing diverse boards and more. These sessions were part of a larger capacity building program that presented 67 workshops in all to 262 organizations.

MISSION INVESTMENTS AND SUPPORT FOR ENTREPRENEURS GROWS

TCF-MIC, The Foundation's mission investment arm, ended the year with $2.47 million in direct and indirect loans to 49 small businesses and organizations, 60% of which are loans to women-led businesses and 84% of which are to businesses led by persons of color. TCF-MIC also committed $10.9 million in direct mission investments, including $10.3 million to fund ConnCORP's property acquisitions and other expenses related to the redevelopment of Dixwell

Plaza, $500,000 as a follow-on investment into Frederick Benjamin, a Black-owned manufacturer of men's grooming products, and a $100,000 shared earnings agreement with Lujo Bar, a Latina-owned manufacturer of beauty products. Photo courtesy of Lujo Bar

THE LARGEST GIFT IN FOUNDATION HISTORY IS RECEIVED

At his death in 2021, James D. English of New Haven left The Foundation a bequest of approximately $35 million to benefit four local organizations. The bequest continues the extraordinary legacy of the English family's generosity in our community. James' brother, parents and grandfather all previously established funds at The Foundation.

VALLEY TAKES STEPS TO REDUCE CHILDHOOD POVERTY

In 2021, The Foundation's affiliate The Valley Community Foundation was part of a collective impact task force studying ways to reduce childhood poverty in lower Naugatuck Valley. As part of the work, the valley residents were surveyed about their needs and how to reduce childhood poverty in the region. An important report was released that highlights the need for affordable, accessible childcare and for a community support infrastructure to provide assistance and awareness of resources.

BASIC NEEDS FUND HELPS FILL THE GAP IN LIFE'S ESSENTIALS

2021 marked the first year of grantmaking for the Basic Needs Fund, one of the three new permanent endowments established under The Foundation's Stepping Forward plan. The Fund's purpose is to help ensure that all New Haven area residents have the basic needs of daily life and to promote the dignity of people who need financial assistance. Nearly $410,000 was distributed among 22 grant recipients. The Fund's Advisory Committee, which consists of donors and others providing services, makes grant recommendations and collaborates on learning. In 2021, it committed to doubling the value of the Fund to $6 million and in 2022 issued a $500,000 match campaign to incentivize giving.

EVENT EXAMINES IMPACT OF THE PANDEMIC ON WOMEN

The Community Fund for Women & Girls, in partnership with The Foundation, held a panel discussion about the terrible impacts of COVID-19, the economic recession and gender and racial discrimination on women, and in particular women of color. Panelists shared the reasons behind the region's labor shortage and how to best support women so they can have careers that result in family economic security and contribute to our region's economic recovery and growth.

PROGRESO LATINO FUND EXPLORES COMPLEXITY OF RACE, SUPPORTS YOUTH

In 2021, The Progreso Latino Fund (PLF) held a series of interactive sessions exploring the complex intersections of race, identity and the work to interrupt systems of injustice. It also sponsored a live, bilingual radio show on financial wellbeing for Latino/a/x families, launched a monthly e-newsletter, provided a matching prize during The Great Give to ten local, Latino/a/x-serving organizations, awarded a grant to the New Haven Pride Center to help expand Latino/a/x programming and supported a second student through its Founders Scholarship.

CAREER DEVELOPMENT PROGRAM LAUNCHES FOR FUTURE LEADERS OF COLOR

Ten emerging leaders are participating in a professional development course designed by The Foundation in collaboration with the Nonprofit Leadership Program at UConn. The new program is a response to the need to create a pipeline for new, more diverse leadership in the sector for the future. Sponsoring organizations received compensation for an employee's participation and participants receive undergraduate or graduate credit.

INAUGURAL RACIAL EQUITY AND CREATIVE HEALING (REACH) GRANTS AWARDED

Seventeen local artists and art projects including a Black film festival, neighborhood jazz workshops, youth podcasting and a platform for local hip-hop artists received $600,000 from The Foundation's new pilot grant program aimed at promoting community healing and racial justice through the arts. Working with the Arts Council of Greater New Haven, a volunteer advisory panel comprising artists, art administrators and arts patrons created and oversaw the grant recipient selection process. The panel prioritized projects that had no other sources of funding and would not happen without a REACH grant.

COMMUNITY FUND FOR WOMEN & GIRLS INTRODUCES GIRLS OF COLOR MENTORING NETWORK

With support from the Fund for Women & Girls, nine mentoring organizations formed a collective in 2021. The Girls of Color Mentoring Network grew out of spring focus groups which explored the challenges facing young girls pre/post pandemic, the supports needed to help participating mentoring organizations and the potential collaboration opportunities among mentoring organizations. The Network builds on the Fund's gender specific work and is designed with a racial equity lens, directing resources to community-based and grassroots organizations led by women of color.

The one-year pilot program provided individual grants of $3,500 to the mentoring organizations.

Cultural Equity Takes the Stages

New Haven has long been considered the cultural capital of Connecticut for its museums and performing arts stages. A movement to prioritize artists, creatives and different cultural traditions is beginning to transform how our community thinks about our cultural assets.

Inside a former glass factory in New Haven, studio artists from around the world are making paintings, sculptures and mixed media installations. Curators are collaborating on exhibits and young students who live nearby are meeting with mentors. The hive of activity is all part of NXTHVN, an innovative arts hub co-founded by internationally renowned artist Titus Kaphar, fellow Yale School of Art alum Jonathan Brand and investor Jason Price.

Located in the historically Black Dixwell neighborhood, NXTHVN is working on multiple levels to expand opportunities for individual artists and the surrounding community. It offers an attractive fellowship that has made it, and New Haven, an annual destination for a diverse group of talented up-and-coming artists. The fellows mentor local arts students and are enticed to stay in New Haven and be a long-term part of the growing arts ecosystem through low-cost housing supported by NXTHVN. The multi-use space is open to the community for gatherings, meetings and low-cost co-working space. And vitality is brought to a street that has suffered from a legacy of disinvestment.

"If we can locate and co-locate creative and artistic activities and bring artists to live and stay and launch their careers here, it translates into value for the artists and for the community," says Price.

Three years in, Price says the model is proving itself. NXTHVN has attracted significant outside funding since launching with start-up capital from a partnership between The Community Foundation for Greater New Haven's Mission Investment Company and a local private foundation. Artist fellows are having work shown at leading galleries in New York while they build their lives and careers in New Haven. Ancillary businesses like canvas stretchers and installation engineers are moving to the city, and a start-up from the NXTHVN co-working space, the men's grooming company Frederick Benjamin, has its products in 1,500 Target stores.

"My hope is that [Frederick Benjamin] outgrows us, locates in New Haven, hires in New Haven and pays taxes in New Haven," says Price. "This model allows us to branch out the four walls and prioritize people who have been dislocated from the traditional growth of New Haven.”

The innovative thinking of NXTHVN and other arts organizations has put New Haven at the forefront of a national movement to advance cultural equity. Theater companies, museums, performance spaces and cultural institutions around the country and close to home are reorienting their missions and day-to-day work to serving diverse artists and audiences.

“Change is here,” says New Haven’s Cultural Affairs Director Adriane Jefferson. “The change has come with new leadership that is more reflective of what New Haven looks like, feels like and thinks like. And, it’s more reflective of the creative sector.”

Such change is visible on New Haven’s biggest stage, the historic Shubert Theatre, which appointed Anthony McDonald as its new executive director in 2021.

“All of us deserve a performing arts center in our community that represents us, that showcases our culture and our talent on the stage. Not just once a year, but for the entire year, for every year to come,” McDonald said in a recent radio interview. “So we can bring our children, who may not have seen a theatrical show or been to a concert yet, but they can hear their culture represented on that stage. That’s why I’m here.”

New Haven’s Long Wharf Theatre, one of the leading regional theaters for almost 60 years, is taking the even more radical approach to cultural equity. It is leaving its permanent home to stage plays at different locations in the community.

“Theater belongs to the community and should reflect the world we live in today, from the makeup of the board to the artisans working onstage and off. This new model will allow us to build on the best parts of our celebrated past as the bridge to a visionary future, to truly be a place for everyone,” said artistic director Jacob G. Padrón.

The initiative taken by two of New Haven’s biggest stages is in alignment with the city’s new Cultural Equity Plan. Released in 2022, the plan aims to address many inequities, including the history of exclusion experienced by artists, creatives and communities. In a city that is majority non-white, the plan notes that the most resources go to institutions, performances and shows that primarily cater to white audiences.

“What we are hearing from people living in the city is that they feel like they are removed from the resources and removed from the creative landscape in the city,” said Jefferson.

New Haven’s Cultural Equity Plan is a departure from prior approaches that promote arts and culture as a means for building the city’s brand and attracting visitors. It embraces a broader appreciation of arts and culture being made in neighborhoods throughout the city. It seeks to improve a sense of cultural belonging among everyone and is committed to serving and prioritizing historically unsupported artists and communities.

“We want more funding and opportunities, not just for the downtown arts institutions. Black and Brown people, immigrants, the LGBTQ community, young people and the old — this plan centers around these voices,” said Jefferson.

The Community Foundation put this vision of arts funding into practice in 2021 through its Racial Equity and Creative Healing (REACH) through the Arts grant program, created as part of The Foundation’s Stepping Forward initiative to address the impacts of COVID-19 and advance racial equity. Developed in partnership with the Arts Council of Greater New Haven, the REACH program stripped away application requirements that are barriers for artists and small organizations, such as having a 501c3 nonprofit designation. As a result, the majority of the 17 awards of up to $20,000 per year were made to artists who were receiving their first ever grant from The Foundation.

The REACH grants went to non-white artists from a diversity of communities and neighborhoods throughout Greater New Haven. The Ubuntu Storytellers is using the grant to pay Black- or Brown-identifying story artists to tell their personal narrative stories in settings called “storytelling concerts.” The power of storytelling is used by Ubuntu to create empathy, bring people together and change the social dynamics that foster racism and white supremacy. Bars on I-95, another REACH program grantee, is elevating local hip-hop artists through a platform that includes a video podcast, blogs, social media and concert events. REACH funding also supported Black Haven’s Film Festival, “Blackness is Global,” which featured 10 Connecticut artists in 2021.

“By centering on Black and Brown creatives and on whatever it is that will bring the community joy through the arts, that is healing,” said Arts Council of Greater New Haven former Executive Director Daniel Fitzmaurice. “The artists are receiving full funding to allow their projects to happen. No match is required, which is really uncommon.”

Jason Price, co-founder and chairman of the board, NXTHVN, developed a business model that is using investments in the arts to enrich the Dixwell neighborhood and New Haven.

Sustaining Transformation

The New Haven area is rich in creativity, artistry and culture reflecting every tradition in our community. Achieving cultural equity will not only require more funding, but also a new mindset in the broader community, at every level, in how we think about culture and what is worthy of support. As Black Haven says on its website:

“It’s time to break down the long-standing systems that keep excellent, genius art from being supported, funded, seen, celebrated and held at the status that it rightfully deserves.”

If we can locate and co-locate creative and artistic activities and bring artists to live and stay and launch their careers here, it translates into value for the artists and to the community.

Changemakers Lead on Equity

From grassroots to established organizations, diverse perspectives and new voices are transforming our community.

In 2017, a group of New Haven high school students, identifying as Black and Latinx, were meeting regularly after school to explore history and race in ways that were not being taught in the regular classroom. Their discussions had repeatedly returned to the idea that all students would benefit from the topics they were learning. Then they decided to move beyond talking about the idea. They moved to act.

They formed themselves into Students for Educational Justice (SEJ) and began to study political organizing. Soon they went from learning about history to making it.

“We began to see that the things that are wrong and unjust in our schools cannot be fixed in an after school program,” said Briyana Mondesir, co-founder and now deputy director of SEJ.

The New Haven students became leading voices in a statewide campaign calling for more high school courses relevant to the lives of and experiences of Black and Brown students like them. They built partnerships with other advocacy groups and connected with students in other districts. When state representatives proposed legislation to diversify the public school curriculum, dozens of SEJ students traveled from New Haven to Hartford to testify. The work culminated in 2019, when Connecticut became the first state in the country to require that public high schools offer courses in African American and Latinx studies.

“Passing that bill would not have been possible without the voices of students,” said Mondesir.

While the bill’s passage was celebrated, its final version did not include

SEJ-written amendments requiring anti-racial-bias trainings for teachers and standards for developing the content. Still, the SEJ advocates rolled up their sleeves and focused their work on the implementation of the new curriculum in the schools.

“We want to help ensure that it does not do more harm than good,” said Mondesir.

Despite the pandemic, SEJ has continued to expand its work in the region, opening several chapters in different high schools where it continues to teach a combination of history and political organizing. The students remain energized, as its agenda has expanded to issues such as replacing uniformed police officers in schools with behavioral and mental health counselors.

While COVID-19 shut down or dramatically curtailed the work of many organizations, it has galvanized SEJ and other advocates for social justice. The unequal impact of the virus and the lockdowns has accelerated the urgency of efforts working throughout Greater New Haven to address longstanding inequities.

“The pandemic necessitated a new way of working because our systems, our government, our social safety net were already not prepared to meet the needs of the community,” says Black Infinity Collective (BIC) Executive Director Camelle Scott. “This reality was amplified by the shutdowns we saw in March 2020.”

An organization that works to address Black, LGBTQ+ and gender inequity through political action, education and mutual aid, BIC used a COVID-19 Community Fund grant in 2020 to help supply groceries to 150 families and distribute direct payments to community members. It was among dozens of local organizations, ranging from the family mental health agency Clifford Beers to the youth enrichment program Squash Haven, that pivoted their operations to provide mutual aid in the form of cash assistance and gift cards to the people they serve.

The BIC mutual aid program has since expanded to support political education and coalition building in order to increase resilience.

“Mutual aid is also about resource sharing and about laying down community frameworks so neighborhoods and communities can build relationships for survival,” said Scott.

The model of resource sharing to build resilience in the community and give it a voice is underpinning a new collaborative of funders in the state. Supporting Organizing Work Connecticut (SOW), consisting of 17 funders including The Community Foundation, is supporting community organizing as a strategy to influence social change. SOW is guided by the principle that the people most impacted by injustice and inequity should determine the issues to fight for. Instead of supporting specific causes, SOW makes funding available for organizers to build up their capacity and train new advocates.

“We don’t do for people what they can do for themselves,” said Lorenzo Jones, executive director of the Katal Center for Equity and Justice, a grantee of SOW that trains organizers as part of its work. “We meet people where they are without judgment. But we don’t leave them there. We build their confidence to be civically engaged.”

In Connecticut, civic engagement is growing around the mounting housing crisis. While the COVID-19 pandemic may appear to be waning, an eviction wave is hitting the court system and affordable housing is far out of reach for many residents in Greater New Haven and around the state. Political energy around the issue is rising up from the community through the work of activist groups like BIC and the Sisters in Diaspora Collective, created by immigrant and refugee women affiliated with the local restaurant and job-training center Havenly Treats.

Educator Leads Students to Nature’s Classroom

The pandemic opened an opportunity for Gustavo Requena Santos to spread his passion for environmental science to local students. A field biologist and educator, Santos entered The Foundation’s Neighborhood Leadership Program in order to create a plan for putting his outdoor science curriculum into the hands of educators and caregivers. His online resource, “Science Yourself,” had a complete set of self-guided activities and teaching kits designed to get kids excited about observing nature and to be curious about their surroundings. It was the ideal curriculum during a time of remote learning, when creative teachers were looking for alternatives to forcing their students to sit in front of computer screens. Using the plan he created in the leadership program, Santos delivered his program to several local middle and high schools and led several outdoor classes of his own.

“A lot of kids don’t have this exposure to nature and science,” said Santos. “I try to bring the strange part of nature to stimulate their questions and curiosity. I don’t want everyone to become a scientist. I would like people to develop critical thinking skills and a scientific mindset. Community gardens can be a learning space.”

For many communities across the state, there is now a lot more deep thinking about the role that affordable housing plays in social justice.

Open Communities Alliance

In New Haven, the advocacy has resulted in municipal legislation requiring affordable housing be set aside in new residential construction. At the state level, grassroots organizing work is also building momentum for housing policy changes. The recently formed Desegregate CT is advocating for limits to restrictive local zoning regulations that limit new housing construction. The newly-formed coalition Growing Together CT is working on a campaign to establish a process for towns to contribute their fair share of affordable housing.

“For many communities across the state, there is now a lot more deep thinking about the role that affordable housing plays in social justice,” says Erin Boggs, executive director of Open

Communities Alliance, which is also a member of Growing Together CT. Boggs estimates that the state needs an additional 140,000 units of affordable housing to meet the existing need. The lack of affordable places to live, Boggs points out, makes it more difficult for companies to recruit and retain employees, putting a stranglehold on economic growth.

Transformation is also happening as a new wave of leaders brings a lens of social justice to many local nonprofit organizations.

“For us, it is understanding that it’s not just representation in our galleries and programs, but also representation across our audiences, our staff and our board,” said Artspace Executive Director Lisa Dent. “It can be as small as smiling when someone walks into the gallery and as large as providing money for artists to create new work.”

In January 2021, Joshua Lamarr Watkins became executive director of the Community Soup Kitchen, one of New Haven’s longest-running emergency food programs. Watkins has overseen a doubling of the amount of meals served and expanded the organization’s reach in Hamden.

The Connecticut Women’s Education and Legal Fund (CWEALF) is now being led by Black women on both its staff and board of directors for the first time in its 48-year history.

“I saw this as a great opportunity to bring what I had learned as an advocate and put it to use to serve women and girls in this state,” said Janée Woods Weber, who became executive director in 2021

after working at the William Caspar Graustein Memorial Fund and for the advocacy training organization Everyday Democracy. “In times of crisis there is opportunity to create great change.”

Woods Weber is using her community organizing skills to further the dual mission of CWEALF, which is to help women in poverty navigate legal issues in family and employment matters while also advocating for policy changes that protect working families, close the wage and wealth gap and improve healthcare access. CWEALF is supported by both The Community Foundation and its Community Fund for Women & Girls.

“We take what we hear from the women we serve, and we think critically about what the root causes are,” said Woods Weber. “We are deeply invested in dismantling white supremacy and racism.”

Increasingly, organizations throughout Greater New Haven are committed to moving the community toward the ultimate goal of a more equitable community. The Narrative Project, a public relations agency that specifically focuses on anti-racist communications, has seen its business skyrocket since opening its doors shortly before the pandemic. It now has a waiting list of organizations wanting help with making diversity, equity and inclusion central to their way of doing business. Looked at collectively, says Founder and President Mercy Quaye, the organizations are building an ecosystem that is committed to social justice issues.

“Organizations are at a pivotal point where they realize we need to talk about race and ethnicity differently,” said Quaye. “The narrative in our community needs to change.”

Sustaining Transformation

Meeting the challenge of developing a new narrative for our community will come from listening to and empowering new voices and being open to new and diverse perspectives.

Creating an Inclusive Economy

New Haven is growing. While leaders have long hailed the benefits of economic development, the public-private agenda is now increasingly focused on inclusive growth.

On the site of a former highway built during urban renewal, construction is underway on a 10-story tower that is the latest addition to New Haven's growing bioscience industry. The project, 101 College Street, has already secured lease commitments from Yale University, the rapidly growing cancer-therapy company Arvinas and the biotech co-working space BioLabs. It sits across the street from another bioscience tower occupied largely by the drug maker Alexion Pharmaceuticals, which recently announced an expansion into 101 College Street.

The towers are key components of the city's Downtown Crossing plan, which has used tens of millions in federal dollars to transform the Route 34 corridor into walkable urban boulevards that connect downtown New Haven with surrounding neighborhoods. The hope is that the area attracts a dense cluster of life science companies employing thousands of workers at all skill levels.

Just over a mile away, Yale New Haven Health plans to start construction in 2022 on its $840 million neurosciences center at the Saint Raphael Campus, the largest development project in New Haven's history. The center will bring state of the art treatment to patients with stroke, epilepsy, neuromuscular and spinal issues, Alzheimer's disease and other neurological disorders. When complete, it will be both a top-tier research facility and major destination for patient care.

Led by this bioscience growth, the innovation economy in Greater New Haven is pointing the way toward a bright economic future for our community.

That is not enough, however, as growth in recent years has also created historic levels of inequality. Economic development must include benefits and opportunities for wealth creation among residents and in neighborhoods that have experienced poverty and exclusion for generations.

"There is a sincere interest in the business community to focus on inclusive growth and bring economic success to our entire community. Despite great intentions, many businesses do not know where to start," said Greater New Haven Chamber of Commerce President Garrett Sheehan. "This is hard work and change will be measured over time — we also expect action. At the Chamber, we see this work as vital to the business community and the overall growth of the region."

Using a three-year grant from The Community Foundation, The Greater New Haven Chamber of Commerce hired an inclusive growth coordinator to help build community-wide support for inclusive growth in the region. Its staff is working full time to connect business owners who are Black, Brown, women, people with disabilities and people who identify as LGBTQ+ with resources that sustain and grow their ventures.

“Intentionally making the business association more welcoming to people who have historically felt left out is having an impact,” said Chamber of Commerce Coordinator of Inclusive Growth Jesse Phillips, who also leads the chamber’s Diversity Equity and Inclusion Council. “Folks are starting to see us as a partner to connect them to services. That wasn’t happening before. We see it by the emails coming in and asking for support and in the call volume. They are making phone calls and reaching out.”

At 101 College Street, developer Carter Winstanley entered into an agreement with New Haven that dedicates 50,000 square-feet for incubator space available at discounted rates for tenants qualifying through local small business programs. The developer is also collaborating with the local jobs initiative New Haven Works to develop skill profiles and establish a process for job postings and candidate referral.

Several of the key community benefits agreed to by Winstanley were set down in an amendment to the land disposition agreement proposed by New Haven Alder Ron Hurt, who represents residents who live close to the project in the Hill neighborhood.

“We have experienced 80 years of segregated development. Neighborhoods like mine have been cut out of opportunity,” Hurt said at the groundbreaking ceremony. “We ran for office to change this history.”

The benefits agreement also aims to build a pipeline of locally-educated talent for bioscience careers. Classroom space is set aside in the building for New Haven Public Schools STEM programs and partnerships have been created between the school district, Southern Connecticut State University’s Bioscience Academic and Career Pathway (BioPath) program and Gateway Community College.

College will be essential for many local young people to build their futures in the biosciences and other growing sectors. The groundbreaking scholarship program New Haven Promise is sending to college large numbers of New Haven Public Schools students who otherwise could never afford it. Many are the first in their family to attend. Nearly 90% are staying in Greater New Haven to build their lives and careers, according to New Haven Promise President Patricia Melton.

“It’s exciting. We are getting people hired,” says Melton. “A good percentage are making more than their family’s household income, and we have many earning twice their household income.”

Jeff Dobbs is a Promise Scholar and a 2020 UCONN graduate who has started his own company, JD Visuals, a design studio that specializes in 3D animation, product visualization and graphic design. Dobbs has a growing client list along with an ambition to help other up and coming young creatives.

“As a creative entrepreneur, I love immersing myself in my craft and developing business skills to share what I’ve learned with others. I aspire to serve my purpose of becoming a resource and mentor in my community and inspiring other young artists who grow up having the same dream as me,” said Dobbs.

New Haven PROMISE

To. Through. And Back.

Since New Haven Promise launched in 2010 through a partnership between The Foundation, Yale University and the City of New Haven, it has seen more than 800 of its scholars earn college degrees, with nearly 300 going on to receive master’s degrees. The program provides up to four years of full tuition to New Haven Public Schools graduates and connects them to career opportunities through counseling and job and internship fairs. New Haven Promise is about building a college-going culture in New Haven and is committed to supporting students through the entire trajectory from the application process to college to finding a job after graduation, as summed up in its tag line: “To, Through, and Back.”

In addition to funding New Haven Promise, The Community Foundation is prioritizing support for inclusive career pathways in growing local economic sectors that provide quality jobs. The strategy has a specific focus on supporting organizations that work with people of color, women, people who are formerly incarcerated, immigrants and other underserved populations.

According to the Connecticut Department of Labor, the sectors that are experiencing growth and provide quality jobs that pay a living wage with benefits are healthcare, manufacturing, transportation, biomedical/bioscience, technology/information and construction. With significant state and federal workforce dollars becoming available, The Community Foundation will focus its resources on wrap-around supports, such as childcare, transportation, behavioral health services and basic literacy skills that help people attend and complete skills-based training certification programs.

Creating access to living-wage jobs and careers is central to the work of ConnCAT, which The Foundation has funded since its creation a decade ago. ConnCAT has multiple layers of programming including skills training for high demand jobs in healthcare and culinary arts, and it will soon be an anchor in the largest development to happen in New Haven's Dixwell neighborhood in generations.

The local Black-led development group ConnCORP, led by members of the team behind ConnCAT, is planning a $185 million transformation of a dilapidated shopping plaza into a complex that includes new housing, offices, retail stores, a grocery, community spaces and a performing arts center. The project, ConnCAT Place, is using a combination of private, public and philanthropic funding.

Together with the recently completed Q-House across the street and NXTHVN around the corner, ConnCAT Place is part of a transformation of the historically Black Dixwell neighborhood. The team behind ConnCAT Place is working to make sure that local residents benefit from the revitalization. The planning phases involved community members through public meetings and engagement sessions to ensure that the development reflects the needs and wants of residents.

ConnCAT Place also promises to bring hundreds of jobs to the neighborhood during the construction and following its completion. ConnCORP and the city have worked to ensure access to the jobs with training opportunities and open job fairs.

"The thrust of our work is to aggressively address poverty as well as inspire wealth generation and wealth creation for existing Dixwell residents," ConnCORP CEO Erik Clemons. "We believe in beauty. We believe in dignity and vitality."

Inclusive growth efforts are also focused on helping small businesses and entrepreneurs. Many small business owners were hit hard during the pandemic, none more so than Black entrepreneurs. According to research from the Federal Reserve Bank of New York, there was a 41% drop in the number of active Black business owners from February through April in 2020, versus a 22% drop in the number of business owners overall and a 14% drop in white business owners.

The Community Foundation Mission Investments Company (TCF-MIC) is working to address inequity locally with a strategy focused on helping early-stage Black and Brown-owned and women-owned businesses succeed. TCF-MIC provides support on several levels, including investments and low-interest loans. It is also working to build and sustain an equitable entrepreneurial ecosystem in Greater New Haven in partnership with local entrepreneurial support organizations.

The past few years has seen the birth of a growing ecosystem of organizations in Greater New Haven, funded by government and philanthropic resources, to offer support for entrepreneurs. They include TCF-MIC, the recently announced Yale Ventures and its innovation community, the New Haven Innovation Collaborative, Liberty Bank's Academy for Small Business program, the New Haven Free Public Library's Exchange entrepreneurial hub, the Black Business Alliance, the Known co-working space and the small business accelerator Collab.

A grantee of The Foundation and its Community Fund for Women and Girls, Collab views entrepreneurship as giving people a path to economic stability for their families and greater agency in their lives. The accelerator program's graduates have collectively earned more than $5 million in revenue and created 197 jobs since Collab started in 2017. More than three quarters of the businesses have been founded by women, and eight in ten were founded by people of color.

Women entrepreneurs in the region also have a new source of capital for their businesses. The national microloan organization Grameen America launched its Connecticut presence in New Haven in 2021. Founded by Nobel Peace Prize recipient Muhammad Yunus, Grameen provides microloans starting at $2,000 to women entrepreneurs who are living at or below the federal poverty line of $27,750 for a family of four. So far, it has established lending relationships with 372 New Haven-based women, lending a total of $826,000. With the support of leading Connecticut philanthropies, Grameen plans to expand statewide, investing a total of $88 million in loan capital to 7,800 women.

In 2021, The City and Yale University forged an agreement that also has a goal of accelerating access to the growing economy. As part of a commitment to increasing its annual payments to the city by $52 million over six years, Yale has agreed to establish a new Center for Inclusive Growth. The center, which is to be guided by an advisory committee that will include university, city and community leaders, will develop and implement strategies to ensure that local residents do not miss opportunities for jobs and wealth building.

"New Haven is experiencing significant growth at this moment and we are harnessing this growth in a way that should benefit all — through additional affordable housing, increased job opportunities, and expanded access to educational and career pathways," said Mayor Justin Elicker. "The Center for Inclusive Growth will build on the work our city is doing to confront inequities and build opportunities and wealth in communities of color."

In my view, and in that of Yale, if the work that we do as a Center does not produce benefits that flow to the entire community, then we would regard our efforts over time as having been a failure.

The Dean of the Yale School of Management, Kerwin K. Charles, is leading the launch of the Center for Inclusive Growth. His lifelong academic work is steeped in the issues being addressed through this growing commitment to inclusive growth: wealth inequality, discrimination in the labor market based on race and gender and the way wealth and economic status is transmitted through generations.

"By inclusion, we mean that we are jointly committed to the idea that the benefits of such growth as it occurs in our community must be diffusely spread across all neighborhoods, in particular those segments of our community that have been historically excluded from growth and prosperity," Charles said in a statement following his appointment.

Sustaining Transformation

To sustain this momentum, the business and social sectors will need to move out of their traditional silos and work together to define and embrace a common agenda of inclusive growth.

Bernadette Bimonte-Hackett Fund for Women and Children Est. 2021 by Bernadette Bimonte-Hackett

For thousands of people, Frank Pepe Pizzeria Napoletana is synonymous with delicious pizza. But for Bernadette Bimonte-Hackett, it was home away from home. She spent each Sunday in an apartment above the restaurant, teeming with cousins, aunts and uncles, as her grandparents held their weekly dinner.

It was also the place where she saw all that it took for a woman to raise a family and run a highly successful business.

“My mom and my aunt ran the restaurant after my grandfather, Frank Pepe, died. My mom was a divorcee raising four children largely on her own while working in her family business. I saw how hard she worked, how much she had to juggle, and how generous she was with customers and staff, with vendors and with her extended family. My mother’s resiliency and fortitude inspired me, in part, to become a social worker,” said Bimonte-Hackett.

Bimonte-Hackett always gravitated toward working in nonprofits that focused on women and children. She received master’s degrees in gerontology and in social work and worked with adults and with children, advocating for those who don’t have a voice.

Retired from social work, she’s continuing in a new way. After talking with staff at The Community Foundation, she created the Bernadette Bimonte-Hackett Fund for Women and Children to provide resources to nonprofits that work in family preservation and on behalf of single mothers and children.

The fund is a way to continue the legacy of her late mother, Serafina Pepe DeMusis, and her late brother Gary Bimonte, who, along with Bimonte-Hackett, her sisters and cousins, was a Pepe’s co-owner, and was always giving back to the community.

Though she lives in Madison now, Bimonte-Hackett’s roots in New Haven and Hamden where she grew up run very deep, and she is excited to give back in this way. “People have always been so supportive of our family business,” she said.

She envisions the fund “helping a single mom get some respite, giving her a little time away from the family or sending her kids to camp, providing something that would make their lives a little easier.”

Burgos Crespo Family Fund

Est. 2021 by Carmen M. Burgos

After working at The Community Foundation for Greater New Haven for over five years and seeing the positive impact Foundation funds have in the community, Carmen M. Burgos decided that it was time to start her own fund.

The Burgos Crespo Family Fund is dedicated to the memory of Carmen's parents and inspired by all the people who gave their support to help others amidst the coronavirus pandemic despite the uncertainty of the times and potential personal risk. Areas of interest that may be supported by the Fund, and that Burgos has supported in the past, include youth, homelessness and education.

"My contribution may be small but I know it will help others. I've seen first hand how many small gifts together add up to make a big impact in the community," said Burgos. This valuable lesson has been passed to her son, who will make grant recommendations from the Fund when Burgos is no longer here.

"My hope is that this fund always serves as a connective thread in my family, and that it carries out a legacy of hope and helping others with compassion."

gO fish 'A Fund in Memory of Owen Osborne'
Est. 2021 by Carly, Devin, Inge and Robert Osborne

Everyone who knew Alan Owen Bickel Osborne knew that he could be as passionate as he was stubborn, and his enthusiasm for people and for living life to the fullest was exceptional.

The Osborne family established gO fish 'A Fund in Memory of Owen Osborne' to honor his memory and big heart centering on the idea that "everyone should get a second chance."

Reflective of his leaning towards all things natural, Owen embraced pursuing new interests and moved almost seasonally between them. He fulfilled drone certifications to explore more of the natural world from above, he pursued ski patrol work so he could be among the mountains and he sought fishing captain's work to be on the rivers, lakes and oceans.

"Owen's interest in the world and realms beyond the confines of the standard inspired him to pursue and explore the natural world," the Osborne family said. "He found peace and tranquility in fishing, or ever pushing to explore the next untouched area, and bringing others with him in his wonder, or through his photography."

Owen found the greatest joy in the places where people could be freest and least encumbered, and he was only able to pause when the world struck him with awe. All of which he wouldn't have been able to achieve without being given the chance.

"Owen would often bring others on his adventures with him," the family said. "This fund is our way of trying to facilitate others to be able to complete their adventures, or meet their challenges, by allowing for a second chance or lifeline."

The family hopes to grow the gO fish fund to the point that they are able to make a significant contribution to support Greater New Haven's at-risk youth community.

Suzanne Lagarde and David Stagg Fund

Est. 2021 by Suzanne Lagarde and David Stagg

Giving back has always been a part of Dr. Suzanne Lagarde and David Stagg's lives. After Hurricane Katrina hit in 2005, Dr. Lagarde and her oldest daughter travelled to Biloxi, Mississippi to see how they could help.

A gastroenterologist who runs Fair Haven Community Health Care, Dr. Lagarde was struck by the overwhelming poverty and the sheer number of people who had no health insurance in Mississippi. After her initial visit, she became licensed in the state, returning several times a year to care for patients at a federally funded health clinic.

Stagg, who started a computing unit at Yale University and worked for years in the IT department, also went to Biloxi, joining a small group of electricians who renovated and built houses. He saw so much need that he continued that volunteer work for 15 years.

The couple are keenly aware of the needs in their local Greater New Haven community, too. Dr. Lagarde, the CEO of Fair Haven Community Health Care (FHCHC), has shaped her career around providing healthcare to underserved people. She knows the far-reaching impact The Community Foundation has on organizations like FHCHC, which serves 31,000 low-income residents.

When they wanted to make a lasting gift to their beloved hometown community and beyond, the couple established the Suzanne Lagarde and David Stagg Fund at The Community Foundation.

"The Foundation is a real force in the community," Dr. Lagarde said. "I'm impressed with the diversity of how they approach giving grants. I'm in health care but they also support the arts, animals . . . it's a wide breadth."

I love the fact that they are always looking at different things, whether it's COVID-19, racism or economic development. They respond to what's going on in the community."

Stagg said he likes that staff at The Foundation will use their investment expertise to grow the fund, that the couple receive a tax benefit from their giving and they can direct funding to organizations and causes they care deeply about. Added Dr. Lagarde, "When the day comes when we are no longer able to determine where those dollars go, then a responsible steward will decide where those dollars in the fund go."

"I like the message that the fund gives, particularly to our kids," Dr. Lagarde added. "Sharing your riches and your treasures with those who have less is an important thing to do in your life."

Silas Orion Fund

Est. 2021 by Lani Rosen-Gallagher and Chris Gallagher

It was a snowy day in 2020 when Zephyr Gallagher turned his shovel into a sled and zipped off down the hill. He gave it a name — schleddling — and soon kids were sliding down the hills of Common Ground’s NatureYear classroom — the 20 acres of woods along West Rock Ridge State Park in New Haven. He came home that day bursting to tell his parents all about it.

“He was outside in the elements, learning, finding ways to create his own fun, having a great time with his friends,” said his dad, Chris Gallagher. “It was everything we’d want for him.”

Common Ground High School, Urban Farm and Environmental Education Center has been part of Zephyr’s life since he first attended a nature camp there. Now, as part of its NatureYear program, the fifth grader spends four days a week in his public school and one day in the outdoor classroom: learning the ways of the seasons, how to grow vegetables, build a campfire and care for animals — something he’s so good at, he’s become known as “the chicken whisperer.”

It’s such a beautiful way to learn, said Chris and Lani Rosen-Gallagher. So, in 2021, the couple created the Silas Orion Fund to provide financial support to families whose children might not be able to take part in Common Ground programs.

The Fund honors their first son, Silas Orion, who died shortly after his birth in 2008. “We had this loss in our lives that was so challenging and so heartbreaking,” Lani said. “We planted a tree in East Rock Park in honor of Silas and we called it our family tree. But we knew at some point down the road we wanted to honor Silas in a new way.”

After talking with staff at The Community Foundation, the Gallaghers decided that establishing the fund was fitting on so many levels. “Silas’s name means ‘of the trees,’ Orion is the constellation,” Lani said. They’ve always been an outdoor family, camping with Zephyr, who now leads them along hiking trails he has discovered.

They wanted other children to find this same kind of joy and they wanted to give back to the communities of New Haven and Hamden who embraced and supported them so fully after the loss of Silas. “We want as many children as possible to have access to these learning experiences,” Chris said. “We want Common Ground and NatureYear to be around for a very, very long time.”

Projects2PH.D. Fund
Est. 2021 by Donald C. Sawyer III

When Donald C. Sawyer III, PhD, was growing up in public housing in Harlem, his parents talked often with him about how education was the way forward.

When he was eight and started acting out in school, he was taken to see a child psychologist. “My parents were concerned about me and wanted me to have someone to talk to,” he said.

The psychologist and his teachers and school administrators told his parents that he was experiencing trauma based on what was happening in his neighborhood “related to the crack cocaine epidemic, the war on drugs, and increasing police violence.”

“My parents didn’t get judged,” he said. “No one said, ‘oh you’re just bad, poor parents with a bad kid.’” Instead, they recommended he find an outlet for his energy. He signed up for martial arts at a community center, learning new ways to channel his energy.

While the people in his community struggled, they also looked out for him. “They saw something in me that I didn’t see at the time,” Dr. Sawyer said. “They looked at me through the lens of possibility.”

In 2021, Dr. Sawyer, who is Quinnipiac University’s vice president for equity and inclusion and chief diversity officer and a tenured associate professor of sociology, established the Projects2PH.D. Fund so that young people growing up in public housing in New Haven see themselves through that same lens.

The donor advised fund will provide scholarships and a network of support to college bound students. The fund honors his father, Donald C. Sawyer Jr., who died in December 2020, and “the community that supported me growing up in Harlem. Some of the most marginalized people took the time to support me in any way they could, with a kind word or helping to keep me out of trouble. It made a difference and I’m just hoping to do the same.”

Shimchick Stewardship Fund

Est. 2021 by David Shimchick

David Shimchick has been thinking a lot about the word stewardship as, “The careful, responsible management of something entrusted to one’s care.”

As the volunteer leader of the Friends of East Rock Park, he has spent years looking after acres of woodland and leading hundreds of volunteers to clear invasive vines, shape trails, create an education garden full of native species and plant thousands of daffodil bulbs. He has also taught a new generation how to care for the park through a youth-at-work program.

Now, he is taking on a stewardship of a different kind, tending to the legacy of members of his family. With The Community Foundation, David has created the Shimchick Stewardship Fund to honor his late parents and sister.

David’s father Walter and his mother Louise were fixtures in the Milford Public Schools, teaching for 37 and 30 years, and his sister, Debra Shimchick, worked for 30 years at Hubbell Inc. Each was very involved in their church and community. While his parents had a long and happy retirement, Debra died at 60 and didn’t have the opportunity to have that. “The three of them were such incredibly hard working, diligent people,” he said. “They saved their money and were never wasteful.”

“Their legacy of hard work needs to be preserved,” Shimchick said. “It needs to be shared.”

After talking with Foundation staff, David created a donor advised fund and chose to support four nonprofits that captured what his late parents and sister cared about. “My Dad was an avid fisherman and boater,” he said. “He found great solace and joy in his boat out on Long Island Sound. In his honor, I opted for Save the Sound.”

His mother Louise was born in Italy, moving to the United States at seven. “She was a wonderful cook,” he recalled. “She made all kinds of Italian dishes. She loved to feed us.” She never wanted to see anyone go hungry, so David chose to fund the Downtown Evening Soup Kitchen in New Haven. For his sister, an animal lover who always had a cat, the Fund supports the Friends of the New Haven Animal Shelter. And for himself, Shimchick, who retired in 2020 as a teacher and math coach in the Milford schools, picked the Urban Resources Initiative “for the incredible work they do for the environment in New Haven.”

During his years leading the park group, David has been inspired by the many ways people give and how that has greatly enriched East Rock Park and the lives of people who use it. “When you give you can make things happen,” he said. “I think that’s just awesome. I’m a New Havener now. It is a city full of people who are committed to giving back and we are a community of tremendous need. I’m proud to be able to create a fund that can help.”

Wayne D. Vetre Memorial Scholarship Fund
Est. 2021 by Jacklyn A. Belmonte

It’s a special kind of person who’s willing to put his own life at risk to save another human being.

Wayne Vetre was such a person who knew early on in life he wanted to be a firefighter. At the early age of 14, he began his career as a Fire Explorer with the Guilford Fire Department, later departing to join the East Haven Fire Department as a firefighter. He then came back to Guilford where he moved “up the ranks” to become the Assistant Fire Chief — a title he held for 15 years of a 40-year career. While working in that capacity, Wayne also served as Deputy Fire Marshal, Deputy Emergency Management Director, Flood Plain Administrator, PSAP (911) Coordinator, Homeland Security Administrator, Computer-Aided Dispatch (CAD) Administrator, Hazmat Coordinator, and Emergency Notification System Administrator.

Wayne always wanted better things for his fellow firefighters, fire department, and residents. During his tenure, he secured numerous grants for education, safety, training, and personnel for the benefit of the Town of Guilford.

As he approached retirement age, a time when many people dream of relaxation and freedom from having to work every day, Wayne began sending out resumes to various fire departments across New England in search of reaching another career first — to become Fire Chief. That goal was reached in 2016 when he accepted a position as Fire Chief in Wells, Maine.

Wayne’s personal mission statement, inspired by a mentor, was ‘Just do something — even if it’s wrong. It’s ok to make a mistake, you just have to do something.’ This courageous philosophy aided him when pursuing his life’s ambition. As all firefighters are, Wayne was fearless with regard to his work and his life in general.

Upon Wayne’s passing, a scholarship fund was created by his widow, Jackie Belmonte, to honor Wayne’s life and carry on his charitable spirit. “Wayne would have wanted to help others pursue college degrees — to help them achieve their dreams, just like he did,” said Belmonte.

The Fund provides a scholarship at The University of New Haven for first-time college students pursuing a degree in Fire Science, as well as firefighters going back to school to pursue a Fire Science degree.

The Diva Fund

Est. 2021 by Allison Ann Alkire and Roslyn Rubinstein

Before meeting one for the first time backstage at the Westminster Dog Show in the 80s, Allison and Roz were not familiar with the impressive Bernese Mountain Dog breed — but then, one came over, sat down at their feet and leaned right up against them.

Soon after, they adopted their own Bernese Mountain Dog and named her Diva, “after the opera ‘Tosca,’ in which the lead character, diva Floria Tosca, is described as a ‘raven haired beauty’ — which described our dog well,” said Allison, a longtime opera fan.

Diva turned heads and won hearts all over. “Diva was friendly to everybody. The face markings on Bernese Mountain Dogs make them look like they’re smiling all the time.”

A few years later, Allison and Roz decided to share Diva’s good nature more broadly: The couple brought Diva to the ASPCA in New York to be trained as a certified therapy dog.

“We took her to work with young adults with cerebral palsy,” recalls Roz. “She was phenomenal. She knew how to behave in different circumstances . . . We walked in and she just knew, once we put the harness on, that she was working.” Depending on individual abilities, the young adults would walk Diva, brush her or simply sit and pet her.

Giving back has always been a part of life for Allison and Roz. “We’ve both always donated to philanthropic organizations, animal-oriented and otherwise. Since we retired, we also have time for hands-on volunteering at a local feline rescue and adoption center. We became more aware of the many small organizations that work tirelessly for animal welfare.” Through their experience with locally-based, volunteer-driven organizations, they became familiar with the work of The Community Foundation.

When updating their estate plans, Allison and Roz decided that, “in order to have a meaningful impact in an area of importance to us, we needed to concentrate our assets around a specific cause,” which led them to start the fund named after the first of their many dogs and cats.

Grants from the Fund will be made with a preference given to nonprofits providing shelter for cats and dogs in the Greater New Haven community.

Charles Hill Fund for Liberal Education

Est. 2021 by Norma Thompson and Justin Zaremby

The late Charles Hill loved ideas, the sweep of them, the possibilities that lived in them.

He worked for years in foreign service as a diplomat and an advisor to Secretaries of State Henry Kissinger and George Shultz and United Nations Secretary General Boutros Boutros-Ghali. Even in those busy posts, “He always had books with him. He was always thinking about ideas, creating files on interesting matters, constantly planning to come back to certain ideas or cultures or themes that seemed worthy of reflection,” said his widow Dr. Norma Thompson, Senior Lecturer in the Humanities at Yale.

After leaving foreign service, Hill began teaching at Yale University where he was a diplomat-in-residence in International Security Studies, co-founded the Brady-Johnson Program in Grand Strategy and was “a beloved mentor to generations of Yale students.”

Each Friday afternoon, students dropped in to talk about ideas on world events, history and culture in an office one of his colleagues described as “akin to the famous old secondhand bookstores where there would be piles and piles of books almost ready to topple over” yet the proprietor could find every book. “His office had file cabinets with meticulously labeled files,” Dr. Thompson said. “But he also had files on top of desks and tables, yet he knew where every single document was.”

In fact, when a student wanted to know more about Tibet, Hill simply turned and found a file he had gathered. He then created and taught the course, “Tibet, An Enduring Civilization.”

When Hill died in March 2021, Dr. Thompson wanted to memorialize him in a way that would “evoke who Charlie was.” Justin Zaremby, an attorney, former student of Hill’s and a longtime friend of the couple, recommended The Community Foundation. According to Dr. Thompson, “I was so grateful at that moment — which was so fraught when Charlie died — to be able to come up with a shorthand expression: The Charles Hill Fund for Liberal Education. It captured exactly what he devoted his life to.”

Establishing the fund would allow time to pass so friends and supporters could work together to determine how best to shape it and honor his life. “There was nothing more important to Charlie than reading, thinking, talking, re-reading,” Dr. Thompson said. “He didn’t consider it working all the time, though I might have put it in those terms. He was living and exulting in ideas.”

Quinnipiac River Fund Water Testing Reveals Big Difference in Bacteria Levels after Rainfall

It was a cold and windy day in mid-October 2021 when a dozen people gathered at Wharton Brook State Park to hear the results of tests for bacteria levels in the local rivers and streams. State Rep. Mary Mushinsky, executive director of River Advocates, shared research findings made possible by a grant from the Quinnipiac River Fund at The Foundation and the Greater New Haven Green Fund. During dry conditions, bacteria levels at many of the 20 testing sites were low enough to make the water suitable for public use, including swimming. However, testing after rainfall showed high levels of bacteria impairing water quality at nearly all test sites, which spanned Wallingford, Cheshire,

North Haven, Hamden and New Haven. E-coli and enterococcus indicated the presence of human and animal waste; in developed areas, with lots of pavement, parking lots and pipes, rainfall easily carries such waste, from dog feces to lawn fertilizer, into the rivers. To help improve water quality and the likelihood of safe recreation, River Advocates offered recommendations for municipalities and their residents. They include: creating natural buffers and promoting the use of natural landscaping rather than paved surfaces, picking up after dogs, creating rain gardens to capture water and ensuring septic systems are properly maintained.

Chapel Haven Schleifer Center Fund
Est. 2021 by anonymous donors

Home: that place where you are most yourself, where you fashion a life of your own making, with good friends nearby.

Creating an opportunity for individuals with developmental and social disabilities to find a home and live independently is at the heart of The Community Foundation’s Chapel Haven Schleifer Center Fund, said Michael Storz, the center’s president.

Chapel Haven is a pioneer in the development of a transition program for individuals with Autism spectrum disorders, Asperger’s syndrome, Down syndrome, cerebral palsy, an array of differences and needs. Adults 18 years and older enroll in an intensive, two-year residential experience with a curriculum focused on developing life skills. Eighty percent of those adults choose to stay on in Chapel Haven’s supported living community.

Most individuals arrive “needing some level of 24-hour supervision” but after graduating they need just four hours a week in support — whether it’s budgeting finances, getting their apartment in order, or having someone to talk with about how work or life is going, according to Storz.

“Our program participants get their own apartments or their own condos. They might move in with a roommate or not; it’s their choice,” Storz continues. Individuals who need additional support can choose to live on the Chapel Haven campus in a more supervised setting. In either case, “they get jobs. They are productive members of society and they have better social and recreational lives than many of us do. We have adults who form relationships and get married.”

Close to 90 percent of the graduates of the program choose to stay in the Westville neighborhood near the Whalley Avenue campus because they “love the life they’ve made with their community of friends.” More than 250 people have graduated from the program and some have lived independently in the neighborhood for more than 40 years.

But, Storz said, the major obstacle has been the cost of the two-year transitional program. Because it isn’t federally or state funded, the program “can be out of reach for many, many individuals,” he explains.

Thanks to the Chapel Haven Schleifer Center Fund, “there is a bridge so that families who would not have been able to afford our program now can,” Storz said. “It’s a priceless gift.”

The donors who established the Fund, and wish to remain anonymous, said they have seen the profound impact Chapel Haven has had. They wanted to make access to such a program more equitable, so that more people have the chance to be part of all the possibilities that unfold as a result of the program so they can live a full and fulfilling independent life.

Storz said he receives calls from parents saying how happy their child is, how they’ve achieved an independence the parents hadn’t thought possible and how it has also changed their own lives and the lives of the rest of the family. “The ripple effect of this gift — the Chapel Haven Schleifer Center Fund — is endless,” he said.

Using A Charitable Gift Annuity to Support A Favorite Nonprofit The Frank and Ellen Estes CGA for HomeHaven

For nearly 50 years, Frank and Ellen Estes have lived in a house tucked away in Woodbridge, CT. It’s where they want to stay as they grow older, so they joined HomeHaven — a group of six virtual villages whose members want to age in place. HomeHaven’s members are professors, teachers, nurses, people of all backgrounds who share their skills and talents with the group. They hold cultural events, talks, and trips, creating lasting friendships, “redefining what it means to grow older in today’s world.”

“We’re married without children, and have no close relatives nearby,” Ellen said. “For us it’s especially important to have a community for socialization and support.”

Wanting to keep the “meaningful concept” of HomeHaven going, the Estes contacted The Community Foundation to set up a charitable gift annuity (CGA). Their CGA will provide the couple with a predictable source of income for the remainder of their lives and, upon their deaths, become a permanent fund at The Foundation that will annually distribute grants to support HomeHaven.

“If you care about an organization and you want to make a large gift, a meaningful gift, but you can’t give everything away because you are concerned about your own financial future, one great option is to set up a charitable gift annuity,” Ellen said. “It provides for yourself first and the organization afterward in perpetuity.”

CRIS Radio Receives Grant to Serve Visually Impaired Persons in Greater New Haven

In late 2021, The Foundation's board awarded $270,000 in multi-year funding to five organizations that serve persons with visual impairments in Greater New Haven.

The grants were made possible thanks to a handful of funds in which donors state a preference that grants aid the visually impaired. Among grant recipients was the Connecticut Radio Information System (CRIS). For the past 43 years, CRIS Radio has been broadcasting print information "that most of us take for granted — from sales flyers at local grocery stores to local obituaries," said CRIS Radio Executive Director Diane Weaver Dunne. "The Foundation's support helps us make words come alive for individuals unable to read print materials due to blindness or other print challenges, providing access to the same information that our family, friends and colleagues enjoy." The grant will enhance knowledge, reduce isolation and increase independence for the children and adults helped by CRIS, and will allow CRIS Radio to offer its services to an expanded number of people. Dunne cited "embracing new technologies" as CRIS Radio's key strategy for improving and expanding services, such as a streaming service in patients' rooms at four acute care hospitals in Connecticut and providing students with learning disabilities and low vision with audio versions of classroom materials. Another new technology they are employing is the CRISAccess™ mobile app to be used for audio tours at museums like New Britain Museum of American Art (pictured) and outdoor public spaces. "Our expansion with new technologies would not have been possible without the support of funders like The Community Foundation for Greater New Haven," said Dunne.

Neighborhood Music School Builds Community, Inspires Personal Growth

During lockdown phases of the pandemic, Neighborhood Music School (NMS) continued to provide free arts and leadership education virtually to New Haven public school students through its Developing and Empowering Leadership Through the Arts (DELTA) program. Students in DELTA participate in workshops and master classes, ensembles and work on collaborative presentations. Juniors and seniors take on the responsibilities of mentoring younger students, leading workshop and assisting classes. The older students also have access to the NMS recording studio for creating original works and professional-level audition tapes for college applications. In addition, the recently created ATLAS Middle School at NMS continued to operate through a hybrid model. It connects academics with academic production. Through a partnership with Long Wharf Theatre, the students learn all aspects of running a theater company. ATLAS graduated its first class of 14 eighth graders in the spring of 2021, all of whom went on to public schools in New Haven and Hamden. NMS received a general operating support grant from The Foundation in 2021.

Women Find Stability with Help from Women & Family Life Center

When a single mother living on the Shoreline had to temporarily leave her job after coming down with COVID-19, the paychecks stopped. After quarantining herself from her 10-year old son by sleeping in her car, she eventually recovered and returned to work. By then, her hours had been cut to the point where she could not make ends meet. Exhausted and not knowing where else to turn, she went to the Women & Family Life Center in Guilford. The center acts as a hub that connects vulnerable women to financial, legal, educational, health and other resources. She received direct assistance to cover her phone bill, medications and a portion of her rent that became past due while she was sick. The center helped her apply for and receive food assistance, and she met with an attorney to recover child support from her son's father. She was also connected to a program to begin pursuing a career as a certified nursing assistant. The mother and her son are among the hundreds of families that received emergency financial support in 2021 from the center's COVID-19 response fund and other programming services. The center received a $90,000 three-year (2020-22) general operating grant and a $20,000 grant from the Greater New Haven COVID-19 Community Fund. It has also received past support from the Community Fund for Women and Girls.

Artspace Pivots During The Pandemic

When COVID-19 shut down in-person gatherings, Artspace got creative. The New Haven alternative space and gallery used the opportunity to rethink how it engaged with audiences through online events and programs. Since reopening its doors, Artspace has used the new technology to expand artistic experiences and reach new audiences. Artspace first tackled redesigning its outdated website to become viewable by mobile devices. A small grant from The Community Foundation supported the assessment and design of the project, and was used to leverage additional funding from the New England Foundation for the Arts and Connecticut Humanities to complete the project. The redeveloped website has been a “game-changer for the organization,” according to Executive Director Lisa Dent. The new site is ADA compliant, connecting Artspace to any user who relies on the use of assistive technologies. The new site also helped Artspace extend programs to New Haven high school students, who primarily connect online through smartphones to open calls for exhibitions and applications to the Summer Artspace Program. Podcasts are now paired with digital presentations, creating a deeper experience of exhibits and reaching audiences beyond the physical gallery space. In 2021, Artspace received support from several funds at The Foundation, including a $50,000 general operating support grant from The Foundation’s Arts Fund.

The group exhibit “Revolution on Trial” recognized the 50th anniversary, local histories and lasting legacies of the trial of seven Black Panther Party members.

A Closed Shubert Theater Opens As Vaccination Site

After a pandemic-induced intermission, the Shubert Theatre's curtain is finally up for a season of musical theater, dance and performing arts. While the stage was silent in 2021, the company remained busy helping the community recover from the pandemic, engaging local youth with the arts and diversifying its board and leadership.

In April, the theater opened its doors to vaccination seekers, helping the community's fight against COVID-19. The theater also collaborated with the New Haven Board of Alders in a food drive. The theater received a $50,000 general operating support grant from the Arts Fund at The Foundation, among other distributions in 2021.

ACT/Spooner Secures New Mattresses, Bedding for Shelter Residents

In 2021, the Basic Needs Fund at The Foundation distributed grants to more than two dozen local nonprofits including Area Congregations Together Inc. (ACT). ACT provides food, shelter and support services via Spooner House in Shelton. The $19,200 grant from the Basic Needs Fund, which is one of three new endowments under The Foundation's Stepping Forward commitment, is being used for "new mattresses, cots, pillows, and bedding," said Executive Director Susan Agamy. The materials, "will significantly benefit our clients through better sleep, which is critical to improved health. We are truly grateful for [the] support and commitment to the community," she added. In 2021, 62 individuals received emergency shelter and support services from ACT, including direct access to a case manager. The food bank provided more than 100,000 meals to over 3,000 adults, children and seniors that same year. Around the holidays in November and December, 510 households received meal baskets, complete with a frozen turkey and all the fixings. ACT is also a grant recipient of The Foundation's partner in philanthropy, the Valley Community Foundation.

Investments

The Community Foundation's assets were $871 million as of December 31, 2021, an increase of approximately 12% over the prior year after distributing over $35 million in grants and distributions into the community.

The global pandemic, geopolitical turmoil, labor force shortages, supply-chain disruptions, and inflation were all headwinds for the equity markets, which remained strong albeit on a more concentrated and narrow basis. In 2021, the Foundation's Corporation trailed its benchmark, posting a 9.0% net return for the year.

The portfolio's performance, construction, and focus on generating exceptional longer-term results through diversification and manager differentiation via less correlated strategies is demonstrated by a strong and consistent value-add over both short-term and longer term periods, generating surpluses against the market-based benchmark of more than 1.8% annually over the last decade. The global allocation of assets that are prudently diversified across a roster of world-class institutional managers continues to provide our fund holders and donors with an effective and consistent investment platform for the benefit of our community.

Mission-Related Investments

As a fully integrated part of The Foundation’s strategic plans for advancing opportunity and equity in our community, The Foundation makes mission-related investments through our subsidiary mission investments company (TCF-MIC).

TCF-MIC works with local entrepreneurial support organizations to build an equitable entrepreneurial ecosystem that will better support Black, Latino/a/x and women entrepreneurs and small businesses in Greater New Haven.

TCF-MIC provides financing and complementary support services to entrepreneurs and small businesses, with a priority for entrepreneurs of color and women entrepreneurs. Working with both public sector and philanthropic funding partners and with experienced intermediary lenders, TCF-MIC makes equity investments, loans and loan guarantees for both for-profit and nonprofit businesses. Our partners in this work include: The Community Economic Development Fund (CEDF), Capital for Change, and HEDCO Inc.

At the end of 2021, TCF-MIC had guarantees of more than $1.2 million to over 22 entities, with more than 60% led by women founders and more than 75% to founders of color.

TCF-MIC’s largest mission investments, made in partnership with a local family foundation, are in two major projects in the historically under-invested neighborhoods of Dixwell and Newhallville in New Haven: NXTHVN and ConnCAT Place.
